

William Raskoff, MD

Cardiology
San Francisco

Inspired by his own professors while a medical student at Stanford University, William Raskoff, MD is an influential educator in his own right.

He taught generations of general internists and aspiring cardiologists in the past 35 years. "I cannot imagine anyone who has contributed to the education of our residents so deeply for so long," says a former resident. With the recent establishment of a Cardiovascular Disease Fellowship at KPSF, his skills as a teacher now enhance the education of advanced trainees.

Those who study with Dr. Raskoff come away with superb technical skills and a deeply compassionate approach to patient care. Says another former resident: "Everyone trained by Dr. Raskoff winds up being a better doctor, and sometimes even a better person."